[Customer name, etc.]

Dear _____:

As we announced in October, Lam Research has reached an agreement to combine with KLA-Tencor. Until the transaction closes, Lam and KLA-Tencor will operate as entirely separate companies. I want to reach out to you directly regarding our affirmative plans to continue the supply relationship with [company] that KLA-Tencor has today and to continue support of the equipment acquired from KLA-Tencor or Lam in the future. While we are still in the early stages of our integration planning, there has never been any question that Lam would continue this policy.

Our purpose for the business combination is to accelerate innovation for the benefit of our customers and the eco-system. Like other firms in our industry, KLA-Tencor has a long history of supplying equipment to the broad semiconductor ecosystem, including wafer manufacturers, mask manufacturers, other wafer fab equipment (WFE) vendors, even firms that compete with KLA-Tencor. Lam Research has experience with that same industry inter-relationship complexity. Both KLA-Tencor and Lam have demonstrated their commitment to protecting the confidential information and IP of all of their customers, including those that compete with them.

As a combined company, Lam plans to maintain the same business approach as KLA-Tencor today, being the supplier of choice for inspection and metrology customers, including those in the WFE business and throughout the entire semiconductor ecosystem. We know that you have and will continue to have multiple vendors for inspection and metrology tools and our business objective will be to continue offering KLA-Tencor products and services to your company. This includes our commitment to support the equipment you have purchased or will purchase from KLA-Tencor and from the combined company.

Like you, our company places a very high value on protecting proprietary information – both our own and that of our partners. We assure you that, when the combined company supplies you with inspection and metrology equipment, we will continue to maintain this high standard, and will continue to have appropriate data protection processes in place.

If you have any questions about our plans for continued support of [customer name], I'd be happy to discuss them at your convenience.

Best regards,
